Like most Southeast Alaska communities, Sitka is accessible only by air and by sea. The downtown area is centrally located, and most points of interest are within walking distance of one another. Sitka offers world class-fishing and wildlife encounters, a thriving and active Alaska native culture, centuries of history including Tlingit, Russian and American experiences, home to one of Alaska's eight national parks, thousands of acres of wilderness, miles of virgin coastline, vibrant culinary scene, and a passionate artist and makers community. One of Alaska's larger population centers, Sitka maintains the charm and feel of a small town. And all this amazing experience is closer than you think. Sustainable tourism may be defined as travel to natural areas that is beneficial to local economies, respectful of the environment and sensitive to Indigenous cultures. Increasingly, visitors are seeking these exact types of travel experiences and Alaska is a natural fit!

Since 2009, Adventure Green Alaska (AGA) has recognized and promoted model Alaska tourism businesses who practice economic, environmental, social and cultural sustainability. AGA encourages tourism businesses to evaluate their operations and determine whether they use – or could be using – best sustainable management practices. Companies in this directory with the AGA logo are certified, or have specific product certified, under the current AGA criteria and must continue to submit a recertification application every two years to continue to demonstrate their sustainable practices.
